INTERNATIONAL LAW AND HUMAN RIGHTS

Peter-Alexis Albrecht, Sir John Thomas (eds.)

Strengthen the Judiciary's Independence in Europe

International Recommendations for an Independent Judicial Power

The Consultative Council of European Judges at the Council of Europe rightly characterised judicial autonomy, that is, the independence of impartiality of the third state power, as a “structured requirement of a state governed by the rule of law” (cf. position no. 8 from no. 10/2007 in the appendix). To do justice to the principle of the separation of powers as an accomplishment of the European Enlightenment, the autonomy of the third power must be subject to the same basic principles throughout Europe as the European Union draws closer together. Until this happens, it is difficult to fully develop the principles of mutual recognition and confidence or to standardise other rules across the EU.

Structures of Civil and Procedural Law in South Eastern European Countries

This small book is a product of a seminar organised by the Koç University Law School, Dr. Nüsret-Semahat Arsel Research Center of International Business Law, and the Max Planck Institute for Comparative and International Private Law, Hamburg, held in Istanbul on some legal issues of South Eastern European countries. In March 2007, several scholars from five South Eastern European nations and Germany came together to discuss the basic legal structure on distribution of justice and contract law in their respective legal systems. The aim of the conference was the presentation and comparative discussion of national law in the light of European harmonisation.

European Yearbook on Human Rights 09

The protection of human rights lies at the very core of European Integration. But considering the multitude of activities by the European Union, the Council of Europe and the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, as well as the important role of civil society, it is often hard to keep track. In-depth analysis by human rights experts is important for understanding changing paradigms and assessing emerging trends.

For this purpose, the first edition of the new “European Yearbook on Human Rights” which is edited jointly by representatives of four major European human rights research, teaching and training institutions brings together 20 contributions by renowned European human rights experts.

Die Menschenrechte als Grundlage für eine gesamteuropäische Rechtentwicklung und ihr Einfluss auf das Strafrecht, das Öffentliche Recht und das Zivilrecht

The perpetuation of Human Rights is a dynamic process of the ascertainment of the minimum requirement of Right. In times of globalisation and networking of different cultures and countries and the internationalisation and Europeanisation of Right, an agreement on a collective basis is essential. The present book assembles articles on Human Rights – from the Turkish and the German point of view – and is intended to enhance the consultation process.

Towards a Better Implementation of International Humanitarian Law

Proceedings of an Expert Meeting
Organised by the Advisory Committee on International Humanitarian Law of the German Red Cross
Frankfurt/Main, May 28–30, 1999

Reporting systems are a well-established instrument of enhancing compliance with international treaty regimes. In the light of gross violations of international humanitarian law which continue to occur in armed conflicts throughout the world, it is necessary to investigate how this method contributes to the better implementation of international law applicable in these situations. Through an analysis of current practice, internationally known experts assembled in the Workshop develop new ideas on the adaptation of a reporting system to the requirements of the law of armed conflicts.

Between Force and Mercy

Military Action and Humanitarian Aid

This volume places the changing interaction between military and humanitarian organisations in the broader context of international political change, the political economy of wars and weak states. It brings together American and European authors with very different backgrounds – from the Pentagon and the British Army to humanitarian NGOs and the Red Cross/Red Crescent movement.

International and National Prosecution of Crimes Under International Law

Current Developments

The book contains a comprehensive insider's account of the negotiations on the Draft Rules of Procedure and Evidence and the Draft Elements of Crimes, a thorough appraisal of the evolving jurisprudence of the two ad hoc Tribunals by officials of the two Tribunals and by distinguished academics, and detailed expert commentaries on the most recent national case law in Italy, Germany, Belgium, Sénégal, the United Kingdom, and Spain.

Human Rights within the European Union

The book contains papers presented by students at the 10th German-Polish Seminar on Contemporary Problems of International Law held in Frankfurt/Oder and Slubice in 2003.

The papers cover the Court's method of defining human rights standards with reference to the common tradition of all member states, the role of the European Convention on Human Rights, and, of course, the European Charter of Fundamental Rights, inter alia the right of life, freedom of expression or data protection, and Human Rights in the common foreign and security policy of the EU as well as in its development co-operation with third states.

Die Schutzfunktion des Mutterstaates im Minderheitenrecht

Eine völkerrechtliche und europarechtliche Untersuchung unter besonderer Berücksichtigung der Schutzfunktion Österreichs gegenüber der deutsch- und ladinischsprachigen Volksgruppe in Südtirol sowie der Diskussion um das ungarische Statusgesetz

More and more European countries frankly declare their responsibility for “their” minorities in neighbouring countries. The „kin-state“ behaves noticeably self-confident. International disputes are preprogrammed. By means of the debate on the Hungarian and an Austrian entrenchment clause for South Tyrol, the authors demonstrate that these measures generally conform to International Law.

We change Europe!

The European Initiative – Art 8b (4) Treaty of Lisbon

In the course of the ratification of the Constitution of Lisbon, today the European Union must also cope with the central question of a living democracy. Whereas there was extensive bloodshed during the French Revolution, today a new civilized culture of citizen participation has emerged: the European Citizens' Initiative. Not only is the book a plea for a European Citizen's participation movement but it serves also as a tangible guide for anyone planning a European-wide initiative.

The Human Right to Water

Water is indispensable for human life, yet more than 1 billion people do not have sufficient drinking water and 2.4 billion persons lack access to sanitation. In 2002, the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights adopted General Comment No. 15 on the Right to Water. Moreover, it is important to explore the regulatory and practical dimensions of this right at national and international levels.

Amnesty versus Accountability

Since the "Nuremberg Trial", a growing array of instruments has been available to hold predecessor regimes responsible for their involvement in horrendous crime.

The book illustrates how various accountability mechanisms have been used in conflict management in El Salvador, Bosnia Herzegovina and South Africa. Building upon the findings of the case studies, the study depicts a hybrid model for a post-conflict accountability system combining the different accountability mechanisms.

International Investment, Protection and Arbitration

Theoretical and Practical Perspectives

In recent years, the Law of International Investment Protection has increasingly caught the attention of international lawyers, both practitioners and academics. In this regard, two related but often not comprehensively covered aspects are relevant: arbitral proceedings and awards on the one side, and individual commercial interests of enterprises which are engaged in foreign direct investment or international portfolio investment on the other. The applicable law in order to protect these commercial interests is both of international and national character and concerns a broad range of issues, equally the applicable procedural and substantive law in arbitral proceedings. It is the central aim of the present volume to try to merge the different perspective on international investment protection law, i.e., not only to focus on specific questions of investment arbitration but also to cover other legal aspects being of interest to investors and home states as well as host states with regard to foreign direct investment.

EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

Peter-Alexis Albrecht

The Forgotten Freedom

September 11 as a Challenge for European Legal Principles

This volume is a polemic for freedom – or more concretely, for a liberal criminal law in Common Europe. In the conflict between security and freedom, the fragile constitutional criminal law is in danger of being crushed completely. The populist concept of promising total security destroys the very foundation of what it hopes to secure. The consequence is: Freedom is surely dying with security!

Eurozone Enlargement

Exchange-Rate Choices and Adjusting Markets
Eastward enlargement will eventually bring about the adoption of the euro by the new member states. This book covers the underlying mechanisms for the most important markets – i.e., labour markets, capital markets, as well as trade and foreign direct investments. It turns out that market adaptation is a key to the success of enlargement. Moreover, the role of exchange-rates will be of crucial importance and may leave room for bargaining between old and new members.

EUROZONE Final Report

This final report of the research project “Ezoneplus – The Eastward Enlargement of the Eurozone” provides a comprehensive analysis of economic and financial consequences of a European Monetary Union enlargement as well as a policy advice. The study concludes that the Central and East European Countries may take decades to catch up economically with their western neighbours unless adequate assistance from the old member countries is being provided.

Liberalism in the European Union

The Way Forward

Liberal key stake-holders, like Prime Ministers, current EU top office holders and advisers, who have been shaping and who are still steering European Affairs, give a sound overview as to the Liberal Dimension of European Politics and International Relations. They take a critical look back regarding 25 years of the European Liberal Democrats Movement while also highlighting the challenges of tomorrow. This publication addresses all readers interested in European Affairs and International Relations.

Public Procurement in the European Union

Directives and Case Law as at 1 February 2009

This book is the first treatise of its kind to systematically and comprehensively analyse the substantive and procedural framework of public procurement law at EU level. It starts with the new, Europe-wide binding directives on public procurement and compares the new provisions with the previous legal situation. Approximately 200 decisions of the European Court of Justice and the Court of First Instance have been analysed. Starting with practical overviews at the beginning of each chapter, the public procurement practitioner gets essential information about European public procurement law. This book was conceived for public procurement practitioners both now and in the years to come.

Die Verträge zur EU-Osterweiterung

Kommentar mit systematischen Erläuterungen

The EU's eastern enlargement by Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Czech Republic, Slovakia, Hungary, Slovenia, Malta, and Cyprus and, then, Bulgaria and Romania has altered Europe's face. The accession treaties, which took effect in 2004 and 2007, form the basis for the admission for twelve new members states and will serve as a model for further extension. The reader will find, amongst others, a depiction of the history and the regularisation of the political fields and the accession states.

European Law in the German-Norwegian Context

Origins and Perspectives

In order to analyse the relationship between European law and the national legal systems, this book focuses in its first part on the historical roots of the relations between German and Norwegian jurisprudence and law and discusses the question of national origins of European law versus an autonomous system of European law both in an overview approach and in an exemplary comparative approach. In a second part, perspectives of European law are discussed in the specific area of the European Union and European Economic Area rules concerning national public interests and public ownership.

The European Economic Area Enlarged

The recent enlargement of the European Union is being paralleled by an enlargement of the European Economic Area. This development creates new political, economic, and legal challenges. At the same time, it encounters a significant deepening of European Community Law in general and the four transnational market freedoms in particular. The volume presents an analysis of this twofold development regarding three types of challenges: the institutions and the Treaties, the transnational market freedoms, and energy and resource management.

Regulation Strategies in the European Economic Area

Regulation is one of the intensely debated big issues in developed market economies in general and within the European Economic Area in particular. To which extent regulation is reasonable and legitimate in the context of the European market economy and whether existing regulation is supported by strategies in the European Economic Area, is the topic of this volume. Its eight contributions analyse three types of issues: the general role of regulation in the European Economic Area, the assessment of specific areas of European regulation (securities, consumer protection, anti-discrimination, environment protection), and criminal law as a new frontier in European regulation.

The Transformation of the European Nation State

This book contains the lectures given at a seminar in Berlin June 3–4, 2005, arranged by the E.ON Ruhrgas scholarship program for political science at Stiftung Wissenschaft und Politik. The contributions addressed the following issues: “Does Europe matter? Autonomy or convergence into a common space of politics?“, “Europe and the Welfare State“, “Post National Security Policy“, “Regional Politics, National or European“, “Power and Democracy in the transformation process“. All of these themes denote challenges to the political and societal developments in Europe over the past 50 years, challenges which may lead to more radical changes in the future.

European Economic and Monetary Union Constitutional and Legal Aspects

The main reason why the competence and responsibility for economic policy has remained with the Member States, even after Maastricht, is that transferring the responsibility for economic policy to the European Community – as in the case of monetary policy – would have required the Community’s conversion from a confederation into a federation.

Integration of Recognized Refugee Families as Defined by the Geneva Convention Considering their Status with the Respect to the Law of Residence

The public awareness of the integration problem has risen all over the world, especially after the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. In Europe, this finally led to the insight that European States are immigration countries. Against this background, the Association for the Study of the World Refugee Problem (AWR) illuminates the immigration and integration problem in selected European States without representing these states’ or EU’s official opinions.

After Eastward Enlargement: Political Economy Perspectives on a New Europe

With the 2004 eastward enlargement, the European Union became the largest common market in the world. The European Union, however, also became more heterogeneous as regards internal economic development levels. The new member states still have to reform their economies in order to catch up with the old member states. Both the widening and deepening of Europe, along with economic challenges in the new member states, have important implications for the European political economy. This volume deals with the European Constitution, Europe’s decision making efficiency, European monetary and fiscal policy, and regional integration processes.

Cooperatives in Ethnic Conflicts: Eastern Europe in the 19th and early 20th Century

Experts from the United States, Germany and East Central Europe show that economic nationalism was the driving force behind the development of co-operatives in Eastern Europe and that the self-help movement reflected the strive for national self-determination almost from the outset. Evidence from Eastern Europe, including Greece and Russia, makes the volume a comprehensive work on the interrelation of economy and nationalism and offers new, refreshing perspectives on a topic on the border of cultural studies and economic and social history. The volume is addressed to experts in the fields of research on nationalism and economic and social history.

Notaries in Europe – Growing Fields of Competence

Austria, Croatia, Czech Republic, Hungary, Slovenia

This publication is the attempt of an appraisal of the notarial tasks within the justice system of selected Central European countries. In it, a piece of regional European legal culture is mirrored which constitutes the fundament that unites legal practitioners in the notarial field of these countries. During the Austrian presidency of the Cooperation of Central European Civil Law Notaries (CCEN), the need became evident to document the tasks and activities of the notaries on a comparative basis. This offers opportunities not only for information about commonalities and individual rules but also to learn from each other about potentials of development and thereby to contribute to the growing fields of competence of notaries within the European Union.

National Borders and Economic Disintegration in Modern East Central Europe

Borders and border regions are one of the most remarkable aspects of 19th century European nation-building. Yet, unfortunately, they have been one of the more neglected fields of research, especially in economic history. Old and new borders had particular importance in the ethnic mix of post-1918 East Central Europe, during the era of nation state-building, in particular in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and the Baltic States.

History and Culture of Economic Nationalism in East Central Europe

Although economic nationalism was a general policy outcome of nation states, East Central Europe was especially affected because of its backwardness, its belated nation building, and its ethnic mixture. The national movements already declared “each to his own” in order to strengthen national power. During the interwar years the young nation states pursued policies of state interventionism whose heritage is alive until today. During the last decade, economic nationalism became an issue of research, influenced by the dependency theory and cultural studies.

BALTIC SEA REGION

The Challenge of Mobility
in the Baltic Sea Region

Mobility is rapidly becoming one of the most salient features of European societies. This process is particularly visible in the Baltic Sea area. There, the European Union meets its immediate neighbours; a wealthy Scandinavia meets struggling post-communist economies; long-established democracies meet developing democracies; secularised Protestantism meets fervent Catholicism and Orthodoxy; and post-modernity meets traditionalism, modernisation and nation-building.

Perceptions of Loss, Decline and Doom
in the Baltic Sea Region

Untergangsvorstellungen im Ostseeraum

At the beginning of the 1990s, in the course of a region-building euphoria, the Baltic Sea Region was re-created a unified territory and exemplary project of co-operation, peace and dialogue. Particularly by the predictions for a prosperous future for this region as a zone of economic growth, technologic innovations, high educational standard, and scientific collaboration, the Baltic Sea Region was made a “pilot” in an expanding European Union. However, the demonstrated development that ends in the “return to Europe – return home” already provokes a question for disruption.

Changes, Challenges and Chances
Conclusions and Perspectives of Baltic Sea
Area Studies

The Baltic Sea Region is a discernible area in the New Europe, with more or less open borders, a rapidly growing economy, common political interests, common security problems, and similar environmental and transport calamities. The region is not culturally homogeneous but endures related identities, overlapping heritages, with a – in large parts – common history.

The process of increasing co-operation – and the horrors of war! – have led to a web of interdependence, held together by interest, policies, treaties, etc. As a result, this region is now a model of peaceful transformation.

Towards a Knowledge-based Society
in the Baltic Sea Region

Fortunately, the ‘discovery’ of a new European region – the Baltic Sea region – has coincided with the establishment of a new paradigm for the scientific interpretation of social and political (not to mention economic) processes: The concept of a ‘knowledge society’ entered the scientific and political conflicts and analysed with great élan in the 1990s.

Transnationale Erinnerungsorte:
Nord- und südeuropäische Perspektiven

This book assembles articles to national places of remembrance which outreach the borders of a national society and, thus, make a contribution to the commemorative and cultural interweaving of regions or spaces. Northern and southern European perspectives will be opposed to each other, precisely, the Baltic Sea region and the Mediterranean area. This book’s articles concentrate on these transnational places of remembrance which are not only metaphoric but also bear a tangibly spatial relation. On the one hand, the authors try to point out a spatial and territorial concept of representation and symbolisation which has been identified by dint of places of remembrance and memorials and, on the other hand, to accentuate the function of such transnational places of remembrance for the formation of regions.

Networking a Region into Existence? Dynamics of Civil Society Regionalization in the Baltic Sea Area

This book sets out to explore the phenomenon of transnationalisation and regionalisation of civil society through a case study of cross-border NGO co-operation in the Baltic Sea region. The theoretical ambition is to contribute to a greater understanding of the processes behind the formation of a regional civil society and to propose a conceptual model that would make such understanding easier. At the same time, at the empirical level, the study sheds light on the context-specific factors that have shaped the mode of civil society regionalisation in the Baltic Sea area. Here, the image of the developing regional civil society as seen through the eyes of the involved actors is set against the background of the New Regionalist ideas that prevailed among observers of Baltic Sea politics in the early 1990s.

Political Culture: Values and Identities in the Baltic Sea Region

Reconciling the diversity of political cultures, values and national identities with the European integration project is one of the most fundamental challenges contemporary Europe is facing. This challenge is readily apparent in the Baltic Sea region with its mosaic of peoples, cultures and identities. The impact of the ongoing process of European integration on the post-Communist societies on the Eastern rim of the Baltic Sea is indisputable. However, the countries on the Western rim of the Baltic Sea have also been exposed to the increasing pressure of globalisation and European integration. After almost half a century of Soviet tutelage, the three former Soviet republics of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania now have to work on independent state- and nation-building.

Go North!

Baltic Sea Region Studies: Past – Present – Future

The basic idea of the “Go North!” conference was to encourage a fundamental change of perspective – away from intra-regional and towards extra-regional and truly global approaches to the Baltic Sea Region: How is the Baltic Sea region perceived when viewed, say, from Australia? What, if anything, would a Chinese student find typical, extraordinary, or even unique when looking at the region? Why should a scholar from Mexico, South Africa or India wish to do research in and/or about the Baltic Sea Region?

Rechts- und Amtshilfe im Ostseeraum/ Judicial and Administrative Assistance in the Baltic Sea Region

Administrative proceedings and court proceedings often need support by public authorities or courts abroad, e.g. for service of documents, taking evidence, or for joint cross-border measures against internationally active criminals. This is particularly true for the Baltic Sea region which is characterised by close economic relations between its neighbouring countries. The present volume includes updated contributions to a Conference organized in Kiel by the University Network Law in the Baltic Sea Area on the topic of administrative and judicial assistance in the Baltic Sea Region. The contributions cover cross-border co-operation in administrative, civil and criminal matters.

In the Baltic Sea Region, countries and legal systems clash which are distinct by close historic relations on the one hand but, on the other hand, also by extremely different regularisations and mindsets. The Law of the European Community, too, impacts differently on the Baltic Sea Region: differentiated legal relations between old and new EC members, EC members with special status (Denmark), countries associated with the EC (Norway), and third countries with a strategic partnership to the EC (Russia). Vom Symbol zur Realität

Studien zur politischen Kultur des Ostseeraums und des östlichen Europas

The modernisation of a country depends on specific cultural preconditions which constitute the political basis for the willingness and the potentiality for a modernising development. This is one of the book's general premises. The interpretation of a development as being modern is therefore in a stress condition according to the indication of the self-conception of a country in the process of its historic existence. Here, the nomination of this relation as political culture is to the very point inasmuch as it clarifies a common larger context.

Great Financial Disasters of our Time

Great financial disasters are no new phenomenon. Probably, the first well-documented financial disaster was the so-called Tulipmania in the Netherlands in the 1630s, some 300 years before the Wall Street crash. At the end of the twentieth century, a similar phenomenon occurred, in the form of shares in companies trading on the Internet (i. e. new technology), the so-called dot-com companies. These events had one thing in common: they were spawned by the new technology of the time and fed by that one great human failing – the triumph of hope over reality, which some people would call simple greed. They illustrate also those other two great human failings: the inability to learn from history and forgetting/ignoring things people already know.

Les sociétés de musique en Europe 1700–1920
Structures, pratiques musicates, sociabilités

The institutionalisation of public concerts in Europe is mainly related with the nascency and the development of music societies as from the 18th century. Together with the arising bourgeoisie and equally to other forms of bourgeois folksiness that took shape in this epoch, they created a new understanding of cultural consciousness and aesthetics as well as new music practices.

Concert halls and places were hardly considered by historians and musicologists. Still, their appraisal does adhere to the reflexion of the social and cultural music practice as its development that took place between the middle of the 18th until the first decades of the 20th century is equally connected to the development of the spaces that significantly formed music activities. Furthermore, the book examines the architectural and aesthetic as well as the cultural, societal, urban, acoustic and musical aspects that are all situated in concert halls and places.

Italian Opera in Central Europe

Volume 1: Institutions and Ceremonies

When around 1600 opera emerged in Italy as a new musico-dramatic genre, its development and dissemination was paralleled in many other countries. It was especially in Central Europe – the Holy Roman Empire, Poland, and adjacent regions –, where Italian opera and the dramatic concept of the entirely sung drama gained a prominent position in musical life, in courtly and bourgeois culture, and in literary and musical thought. “Institutions and Ceremonies” is the first of three volumes in the research project “Italian Opera in Central Europe, 1614–1780” which is part of the programme Musical Life in Europe (1600–1900), launched by the European Science Foundation Humanities Programme in 1998 and concluded in 2002.

The Faces of Nature in Enlightenment Europe

The essays collected in this volume describe a range of Enlightenment attempts to make Nature visible, to give nature a face – and sometimes a body. These efforts spanned natural philosophy and map-making, the opera and the menagerie, ribald satires on learned women, and ponderous treatises of natural theology, the garden, and the museum. Savants and midwives, monarchs and philosophers, country squires and urban academicians, all participated in staging the Enlightenment pageant of nature. The essays draw upon sources in French, German, Italian, English, and Latin and combine perspectives from the history of science and medicine, the history of art and music, as well as from cultural and intellectual history.

Italian Opera in Central Europe 1614–1780

Volume 3: Opera Subjects and European Relationships

The background to this third volume of “Italian Opera in Central Europe, 1614–1780” is the emergence of the new genre of opera in Italy around 1600 and its development and dissemination in Central Europe between 1614 and c. 1780. The present volume explores more thoroughly the European dimension of Italian opera.

The eighteen papers in this volume concentrate on court opera but also discuss commercial operatic practices and explore different levels of style, up to the phenomenon of parody, an ironic self-representation of the genre.

Musical Education in Europe (1770–1914)

Compositional, Institutional and Political Challenges

Volume 1 and Volume 2

In the nineteenth century, music acquired unprecedented cultural value across Europe. The resulting demand for musical education was shaped according to the political, economic, and religious conditions of individual nations and cities but it also gave a new impetus to the circulation of teachers, students, and pedagogical models. The gradual institutionalisation of conservatories is studied here as a field of conflicting aesthetic as well as political ideas.

Conditions and Their Successful Transformation

The political and historical background of the Berlin Airlift have been well researched. Less is known about the people and planes focused on in this documentary study. The success of the airlift is owed not only to the air crews who risked their lives so often but also to all the others who inconspicuously made their great and tireless contributions. Success is also owed to the aircraft which transported supplies for the 2.2 million people living in the besieged western sectors of the city.

The orchestra was the most stable and institutional component of European opera houses during the 19th century. The Opera Orchestra in 18th and 19th Century Europe

II: The Orchestra in the Theatre – Composers, Works and Performance

This volume is part two of the publication “The Opera Orchestra in 18th and 19th Century Europe”. It deals with the opera orchestra in the theatre and opera house; it sheds light on the encounters of different orchestras with certain innovative and demanding operas; and it studies the interrelation between orchestras and operas by analysing what happened to an opera when it was played by an orchestra that differed substantially from the one for which the opera was conceived – or to put it another way, what happened to the structure of an orchestra when it performed an opera with an atypical or unusually large instrumentation.

Concepts and Issues

This book is an outcome of the activities of a research group on “the Circulation of Music” that formed a part of the research project “Musical Life in Europe 1600–1900”, launched by the European Science Foundation. Each chapter deals with the concepts and phenomena that are of importance in a certain subdomain within the general field of music printing and publishing.

The Circulation of Music in Europe 1600–1900

A Collection of Essays and Case Studies

One cannot study the history of musical life in Europe without studying the circulation of musical works. Music goes from one place to another because of an asymmetrical situation: that is, there is the production of exportable music on one place that matches the need for imported music on another place. Whereas before 1700 music was often produced for the local or regional market, from 1700 on music publishers produced music in such a way that it could be sold internationally.

The studies in this volume on “The Circulation of Music in Europe 1600–1900” approach the topic from a number of different angles.

Public International Law – Concordance of the Festschriften

Droit international public – Concordance des mélanges

Völkerrecht – Festschriftenkonkordanz

“Public International Law – Concordance of the Festschriften” is a source book for reference and research.

The collective commemorative works, also known as Festschriften, mélanges or libri amicorum, constitute a growing and successful division of writing on public international law.

The Concordance surveys the Festschrift literature of public international law from its origins in the 1930s up to the start of the 21st century. Unrivalled information is provided on the volumes and their contents. The recipients of the works, among the most eminent international lawyers of all countries, are identified.

Corporate Governance

Essays in Honor of Horst Albach

Corporate Governance is a subject of great interest to academics, investors, and politicians throughout the world. Corporate governance issues arise in institutions if there is a potential conflict of interest among the stakeholders, and transaction costs due to this conflict cannot be eliminated. Various economies have evolved different mechanisms to resolve the corporate governance issues. Anglo-Saxon systems differ from European and Japanese systems; so do Eastern Europe and China, for instance, who experiment about the way private organisations should be governed.

This book is an essential reading for academics, university students, practitioners, investors, politicians, and legislators. The book is in honor of Horst Albach, a scholar who has influenced the scientific world in a very significant way.

The Electronic City

The topic “The Electronic City” refers to the introduction and the consequences of the new information and communication technologies for urban life. In which way can E-Europe for all be realised? How can the digital divide be overcome? What are the consequences for the socially disfavoured groups and how can they participate in the E-City? Is human behaviour different in virtual space? These are the questions which are part of many discourses on this topic and which are addressed in this book.

Daniel Ellsberg

At the beginning of the 1970s, Ellsberg made the so-called Pentagon Papers that covered the long lasting involvement of the US government in the Vietnam War open to public. The Papers revealed the immoral background of the Vietnam War and were finally decisive for the end of it.

Until today, Daniel Ellsberg has been dedicated to the uncovering of breaches of law, lies or concealments of the military and security policies of the US government. He became a role model for Whistleblower.

Theodore A. Postol, Arpad Pusztai

The physicist Theodore A. Postol has criticised for years the American antimissile defence programme. He continuously contributes to the delegitimisation of a weapons system that would lead to nuclear armament by other countries.

The biochemist Arpad Pusztai discovered damages in the immune system and disturbances of growth in organs with rats that were fed with genetically modified potatoes. He made his discoveries open to public and lobbied for a global security check of genetically modified organisms.

Practical Reasoning

The reasons humans have to perform different acts and the way they use such reasons in practical inferences and reasonings are the subject matter of this essay in which the author intends to clarify how the limited "bounded" rationality characteristic of human beings functions in different fields of action and practical deliberation.

The Road to Welfare Pluralism

Old Age Care in Sweden, Germany and Britain
Welfare pluralism is often seen as a possible solution to the welfare crisis many western countries are experiencing. Alternative sources of welfare provisions have become attractive in systems once dominated by the state. The family, the company, and voluntary organisations can provide services where the state has left a gap. There are, however, several grounds for scepticism about the benefits of welfare pluralism. This book serves as a handy presentation of the problems and developments and offers a critical discussion of the concept and the ideas of welfare pluralism in Sweden, Germany and Britain.
